~~~~~~~~~

He bounced lightly in place, body already prickling with sweat beneath the heavy coat. A conceit, that, but it had drawn him immediately; drawn him right out of himself and into the illusion, exactly as he'd needed. Liquor had helped incinerate any remaining flutters of doubt.

There were friends and family in the audience (his wife). And his bandmates - men he loved, who were friends and family and more, all at once. None of them mattered right now.

None of them could.

When the signal came, he was ready and the Reverend exploded onto the stage, leaving Billie Joe behind.
